

ABSTRACT

A fishing lure includes a main body member. A cap is sealingly fixed to a aft end of the main body member. A slider tube is telescopingly engaged with the main body member extends forwardly away from main body member against the force of a cylindrical coil spring within the slider tube. A jumping motion is created for the lure when the slider tube is extended and then released.